

The Federal Communications Commission

Dear The Federal Communications Commission,

I am a married stay at home mother of three children who just recently heard of the plan to raise the rates on phone cards. I use the phone cards to call my family as I choose not to have a long distance provider. I feel phone cards help me to keep my bill lower by only paying for long distance WHEN I use it. I also have a "trac-fone" that I tend to take with me while I am out in case I need it for an emergency. Since my husband is the sole provider for our family, it would be really difficult to continue to buy the prepaid cards as we do now (my husband also has a pre-paid cell phone, but his is T-Mobile). I am sure we are not the only family that would be in this predicament. For once lets stand up for the "little guy" and keep the rates the same. Thanks for your time regarding a fair decision on this matter.

Sincerely,

Mishayla Kiernan
